Three Ways to Participate in Responsible Gaming Education Week

Join the gaming industry in recognizing Responsible Gaming Education Week (RGEW) from September 13-19, 2020 with ideas to participate for employees, customers, and your community.

For Employers

Consider opportunities during RGEW to highlight your organization's responsible gaming efforts to the broader community.

Place an op-ed in a local newspaper or media outlet or adapt for a blog post on your organization's website.

Partner with local National Council on Problem Gambling chapters for RGEW virtual events or communications.

Consider pitching spokespeople for local news to discuss responsible gaming practices.

For Employees

Employees serve as the front line for responsible gaming efforts. Use RGEW to reenergize your training efforts and empower employees with the knowledge and tools to recognize the difference between responsible gaming and gambling that is problematic.

RGEW serves as a great opportunity to provide refresher trainings to employees at all levels. Make the trainings informative and interactive by adding in quizzes, prizes, or recognition.

Use the week to reinvigorate responsible gaming resources—like brochures, posters—offered to employees.

For Customers

Responsible gaming efforts help customers make informed choices about their gambling. RGEW provides the opportunity to promote transparency and gaming literacy by educating customers of the odds of games and potential risks of problem gambling.

Feature responsible gaming messaging on public channels like social media, informational kiosks, and websites.

Distribute informational materials on premise or through gaming apps.
